Interim Administrator Named for Wyoming Life Resource Center

The Wyoming Department of Health announced today that Virginia Wright has been named as interim administrator of the Wyoming Life Resource Center (WLRC) in Lander.

“I want to thank Virginia for taking on this leadership role at what I consider to be one of our department’s shining stars,” said Dr. Brent Sherard, Wyoming Department of Health director and state health officer. “The Wyoming Life Resource Center will continue to provide quality, specialized care to those Wyoming citizens who need its services.”

WLRC, formerly known as the Wyoming State Training School, hosts specialized programs for people with disabilities and specialized medical and therapeutic needs. These offerings include the Canyons Program for people with intellectual disabilities and the Visions Program for people with brain injuries. The center also serves as a resource for outpatient and outreach services and caregiver training for Wyoming.

Wright, who has been working as the Canyons/ICF coordinator, takes over for Diane Baird Hudson, who had held the top position at WLRC since 2005.
